In the era of internet, it is becoming increasingly difficult for the students to find a right institute for themselves. Students have to visit various fairs and even college and university campuses to find out the right place to pursue their education. The institutes typically share limited information with the students and hide details that are more important. An example of this is placements information - salary details, companies that visited the campuses, average and highest salary. Some institutes do not fully disclose the scholarships they offer.

Besides this some students struggle to figure out if they stand a chance of getting into an institute. What was the cutoff last year? The government does publish this information but those sites are difficult to use.

Our portal TargetAdmission.com aggregate all this information and also brings together a community of like minded students who can interact with each other and collectively decide what is best for them. The student can search colleges by various courses. They can also read about courses and their future prospects on the site itself.
